Editorial

To use a thoroughly overworked statement, the last few months have been unprecedented. We have tried to reflect these times in this issue with some extra articles about life during lockdown. It is a time to thank a large number of people starting, of course, with all those who have been working in the NHS and other parts of the care sector – it has been a most harrowing time for them and we can only hope that the gratitude we have shown by clapping on Thursdays has helped to give them some support. There are many others on whom we have come to rely in order to keep some semblance of normal life, including those who have delivered the post, parcels and food, collected the bins, delivered milk and have kept our shops going.

Thank you all! Singling out two from our roads, firstly Jason from the Sebright Arms who has cheered us up with his initiatives to provide hot food and more latterly his mobile Guinness delivery service that has brought cheer to many. We wish him well with his mobile kitchen in the pub garden and his move to provide socially-distanced outside seating to bring the pub back to life. The Singh brothers of Jem's News have set out to run as safe a shop as possible, while providing an astonishing range of food, drink and general household requirements. See if you can catch them out by asking for something they haven't got – you'll probably lose! We do hope that both of these local businesses will benefit in terms of increased future trade.
